UK Outlook for Saturday 12 Jun 2021 to Monday 21 Jun 2021:

High pressure is likely to bring a lot of dry and settled weather across the country at first. The exception is across the far northwest where occasional spells of cloud and rain accompanied by stronger winds are likely. Temperatures here are expected to be near normal but elsewhere it is expected to be very warm perhaps hot for a time. As we head into the second half of next week, there are signs that less settled conditions could extend to other parts of the country with temperatures returning to nearer normal by the end of the week. This change is likely to be accompanied by a spell of rain, potentially thundery in places, and some stronger winds than of late.
